

Trading Table Rubric (Design your Own Fur Trading Post)

	1	2	3	4
Organization	Trading table is not organized in a table format. List of trading table items are disorganized and aesthetically unpleasing. Trading table consists of less than three items.	Trading table is somewhat organized in a table format. List of trading table items are organized in an fairly aesthetically pleasing way. Trading table consists of four or less items.	Trading table is organized in a table format. List of trading table items are nicely organized in an aesthetically pleasing way. Trading table consists of five to seven items.	Trading table is neatly organized in a table format. List of trading table items are precisely organized in an aesthetically pleasing way. Trading table consists of seven or more items.
Historical Validity and Justification of Items	More than 3 items listed on the trading table are not appropriate for the fur trade era. Items have no justification linking to fur traders daily lives or living on the land. Justification of items on the trading table display limited logic or critical thinking skills. Little to no historical connections have been made and require more explanation.	Two to three items on the trading table are not appropriate for the fur trade era. Items have limited justification linking to fur traders daily lives or living on the land. Justification of items on the trading table display some logic and critical thinking skills, but lack specific detail and depth. Historical connections made must be explained in more detail.	One or less items on the trading table are not appropriate for the fur trade era. Items have appropriate justifications linking to fur traders daily lives or living on the land. Justification of items on the trading table display good logic and critical thinking skills. Most justifications display specific detail and depth. Historical connections made are explained with enough detail and depth.	All items on the trading table are appropriate for the fur trade era. Items have strong justifications linking to fur traders daily lives or living on the land. Justifications of items on the trading table display strong logic and critical reasoning skills. All justifications display specific detail and depth. Historical connections made are strongly explained with depth and detail.